

Building a Life Part III

“How can we do X better?” This is a offend few people. Well, the flip side often offend – it is repentance, what is such a galling word! Many of us little better, but are insulted by the doing isn’t perfect! Hello!

reasonable question that would to this question, the answer, does we need to do different. Repentance think MAYBE we could do things a suggestion that what we are now

We are designed for repentance, the proof being that, only way to successfully cope with life is through spite of the obvious stupidity of it, we think of control. Yet, we find life is a series of hurdles we face to “jump” or, through repentance, overcome.

as we age, the repentance. In ourselves as in and normally fail

The discipline of repentance is the frequent and repeated practice of questioning “How can I do X better?” so changes are made in a positive way as opposed to looking or falling for answers with no thought, effort or cost.

Oliver Wendell Holmes seemed to be saying much the same thing (much better!) with his quote:

“I wouldn’t give a (fig)  for the simplicity on this side of complexity; I  would give my right (arm) for the simplicity on the far side of complexity.”

Disciplined repentance guides us through the initial simplicity and complexity to the simplicity on the far side of complexity – if making sense of life is worth our right arm!
